

Scholarly vs. Non-Scholarly Sources

Check off the boxes to determine whether your article is scholarly or not	Scholarly Articles 	Non-Scholarly Articles
Who wrote the articles?	<input type="checkbox"/> Scholars & researchers in the field <input type="checkbox"/> Names & credentials are clearly stated	<input type="checkbox"/> Journalists/ staff writers <input type="checkbox"/> Names are not always noted
What is the purpose of the articles?	<input type="checkbox"/> To share the results of primary research & experiments with experts in their field	<input type="checkbox"/> To inform or entertain
Who reads the articles?	<input type="checkbox"/> Subject matter experts in the field <input type="checkbox"/> Those interested in the topic at a research level- researchers, college students, professors, etc.	<input type="checkbox"/> Anyone
How long are the articles?	<input type="checkbox"/> Articles may be lengthy, approximately 6 to 30+ pages	<input type="checkbox"/> Articles may be short, approximately 1 to 5 pages
Who decides which articles are published?	<input type="checkbox"/> Experts in the field review each article for accuracy, relevance, etc. (the peer review process)	<input type="checkbox"/> Editors and other writers of the publication decide based on consumer appeal- no peer review
How do the articles look?	<input type="checkbox"/> The majority have a simple black-and-white format, charts, graphs, statistics, list of references, minimal or no advertising	<input type="checkbox"/> Lots of pictures, photographs, advertisements- designed to appeal to the general public
Do the articles cite their sources?	<input type="checkbox"/> Always- using the official citation style appropriate to the discipline (APA, MLA, Chicago, etc.)	<input type="checkbox"/> Rarely- though may link to a source/ mention sources informally in the text of the article